

Table of Contents

Contributors	iii
Acknowledgments Sreng Mao & Kelly Kimura	ix
Foreword Simon Borg	xi
Introduction Roger Barnard & Jinrui Li	xiv
Overview Language Learner Autonomy: Exploring Teachers' Perspectives on Theory and Practice Phil Benson	xxxiii
Learner Autonomy in Vietnam: Insights from English Language Teachers' Beliefs and Practices Nguyen Van Loi	1
Developing Learner Autonomy: Chinese University EFL Teachers' Perceptions and Practices Yi Wang & Ming-xin Wang	23
Developing Autonomous Learners in Japan: Working with Teachers Through Professional Development Richmond Stroupe, Colin Rundle, & Koki Tomita	43
Cambodian ELT Teachers' Beliefs and Practices Regarding Language Learner Autonomy Chan Narith Keuk & Vileak Heng	62
Perceptions of Learner Autonomy in English Language Education in Brunei Darussalam Noor Azam Haji-Othman & Keith Wood	79

ii Table of Contents

Thai Teachers' Beliefs in Developing Learner Autonomy: L2 Education in Thai Universities Pataraporn Tapinta	96
Learner Autonomy: English Language Teachers' Beliefs and Practices in the Philippines Marilu Rañosa-Madrurnio, Veronica N. Tarrayo, Ruanni Tupas, & Paolo Niño Valdez	114
Teachers' Beliefs About Learner Autonomy and Its Implementation in Indonesian EFL Settings Nenden Sri Lengkanawati	134
Afterword A Dynamic Metacognitive Systems Perspective on Language Learner Autonomy Lawrence Jun Zhang	150

Contributors

Roger BARNARD is an associate professor in applied linguistics at the University of Waikato. Before taking up his present post in New Zealand in 1995, he worked in England, Europe, and the Middle East as a teacher, teacher educator, manager, and advisor to ministries of education. He has recently accepted visiting professorships in Japan, Korea, and Vietnam, where he has taught undergraduate and postgraduate courses and undertaken joint research projects. His most recent books are Language teacher cognition and practice: International case studies, which he co-edited with Anne Burns, and Codeswitching in university English-medium classes: Asian perspectives, co-edited with James McLellan. He is currently co-editing a book of approaches to researching ESOL teachers' reflective practices.

Phil BENSON joined Macquarie University as professor of applied Linguistics in 2014 after more than twenty years as an academic in Hong Kong. His background is in TESOL and he has taught English in Japan, Malaysia, the Seychelles, Kuwait, and Algeria. His main research interest is in autonomy and informal language learning beyond the classroom. He is the author of Teaching and researching autonomy in language learning (Pearson, 2011) and has authored many publications and co-edited several collections of papers in this area. He has recently compiled (and constantly updates) a bibliography of more than 2,000 items on autonomy in learning. This interest has recently led him into research projects on study abroad, language learning and new digital media, and the roles of popular culture in second language learning.

Simon BORG has been involved in the study of language teacher cognition for over 20 years and his book Teacher cognition and language education (2006, Bloomsbury) remains a central reference in this area of research. He works full-time as an ELT consultant specializing in teacher education and professional development. He is also a visiting professor of TESOL at the University of Leeds and an adjunct professor of English at Bergen University College. Details of his work are available at <http://simon-borg.co.uk/>.

Noor Azam HAJI-OTHMAN is the Director of the Centre for Advanced Research (CARE), Universiti Brunei Darussalam. He is also associate professor in applied linguistics, and teaches on the English Language & Linguistics and the Communication and Media Studies programmes. His main research interests include the interactions between the indigenous languages of Brunei with Malay and English in relation to, and / or as a result of state policy on language, education, and society. He is also interested in bilingualism and bilingual education, and teaching and learning strategies in multilingual classrooms. As director of CARE, he oversees various research projects on youth, obesity, aging, social values, and welfare, topics that have national implications for Brunei; and Malay and English in terms of, or as a result of, state policy on language and education.

Vileak HENG is a lecturer of English and teacher trainer at the Department of English of the Institute of Foreign Languages, Royal University of Phnom Penh. He is experienced in teaching various courses, especially Teaching Methodology, Literature Studies, Foundations of Education, and Curriculum Development. He currently holds two master's degrees: an MEd in TESOL from Charles Darwin University, Australia (2013), and an MEd in Administration and Leadership from the Royal University of Phnom Penh, Cambodia (2012). His research interests include motivation in English language learning and teaching, English for specific purposes, and assessment and evaluation.

Chan Narith KEUK is a lecturer of applied linguistics and teaching methodology at the Department of English of the Institute of Foreign Languages, Royal University of Phnom Penh. He holds a PhD in Linguistics from Macquarie University, Australia (2015). He also holds an MA in English Language and Literature Teaching from Ateneo de Manila University, Philippines (2006) and a Graduate Diploma in Applied Linguistics from RELC, Singapore (2000). His research interests include the variety of English used in contemporary Cambodia, the study of English language teachers, and English language teaching education in an EFL context.

Nenden Sri LENGKAWATI is professor of English Education at Indonesia University of Education, Bandung, Indonesia, and obtained her bachelor's, master's and doctoral degrees at IKP Bandung. She teaches graduate papers on in-service programmes for teachers of English from all parts of Indonesia, and supervises theses by some of these teachers. Her particular research interests are in EFL methodology and language teacher cognition, and she has published frequently in these areas. Based on her most recent research, she is currently preparing further publications which develop ideas introduced in her chapter in the present book.

Jinrui LI worked for twelve years as a lecturer in the Foreign Languages Department of Hebei Polytechnic University before moving to New Zealand in 2008. After completing her PhD at the University of Waikato, she took up a post as Teaching Fellow in the Faculty of Education and worked as a research assistant. In addition to giving conference presentations and publishing several articles based on aspects of her PhD thesis, she is an accredited translator and regularly carries out commissioned work in this area.

Marilu RAÑOSA-MADRUNIO is professor at the Department of English of the University of Santo Tomas (UST). She also teaches applied linguistics courses at the UST Graduate School where she currently serves as the Dean. She has been a member of the Technical Committee for English of the Philippine Commission on Higher Education (CHED) since 2007 and a member of the Editorial Board of the Asian Journal of English Language Studies (AJELS). Her research interests include world Englishes, Philippine English, sociolinguistics, and forensic linguistics (FL). Her latest publication (forthcoming) is a co-authored chapter in English Language Education in Asia (Springer Publishing).

NGUYEN Van Loi is currently senior lecturer and teacher educator in the field of English language teaching at Can Tho University. He completed his PhD in Education at the University of Waikato, New Zealand. His research interests include language teacher cognition, teacher education and professional development, and second language teaching and learning. He is currently head of the Department of English Teacher Education.

Colin RUNDLE is a lecturer in the World Language Center at Soka University and an officer of JALT's Learner Development SIG. He has taught English for 20 years in Australia, Indonesia, and Japan, and is currently interested in learner autonomy, English for specific purposes, and language socialization in Japan. His main publications are Scaffolding economics language and learning with case studies, in Realizing autonomy: Practice and reflection in language education contexts (2012); Identity construction in a third place: A Japanese intern's social network, in Learning Learning (2011); and Teacher approaches to Japanese culture: Implications for student autonomy, in Proceedings of the Independent Learning Association 2007 Japan Conference (2009).

Richmond STROUPE is currently the Program Chair for the Masters in International Language Education: TESOL at Soka University in Tokyo. He is Vice President of the Japan Association of Language Teaching (JALT), and his academic interests include curriculum development, teacher training, and international comparative education. He has had a long association with CamTESOL (Cambodia), was the first Editor-in-Chief of Language Education in Asia, and is active in the TESOL International Association.

Pataraporn TAPINTA (Ph.D. in Reading Education) has been in EFL writing classrooms at Kasetsart University, Thailand for about 21 years. With her special interest in ESL literacy development, her research studies have mainly concentrated on topics related to EFL learners' behaviors and performance in writing and reading. More recently, she has become interested in developing learners' metacognitive skills, and this leads to her present research study on developing LA in the EFL learning context in Thailand. Her additional field of teaching and research covers socio-cultural aspects of various types of discourse including classroom discourse.

Veronico N. TARRAYO teaches at the Department of English, Faculty of Arts and Letters of the University of Santo Tomas (UST), the Philippines. He holds a Master of Arts in Language Teaching degree and is currently taking his Ph.D. in English Language Studies at UST. His research interests include the teaching of English as a second language (TESL), critical discourse analysis (CDA), gender and language, intercultural communication, and women's literature. He has recently published research articles in the International Journal of English Language and Translation Studies, i-manager's Journal on English Language Teaching, and the International Journal of Language and Literature. At present, he is an editorial board member of the Asian Journal of English Language Studies, the official journal of the UST Department of English.

Koki TOMITA is a lecturer in the World Language Center at Soka University Japan. He has taught lower level English courses for a year at the university, and the teaching experience leads him to being interested in how to improve the level of autonomy of lower level students. His current research interest is an application of the self-determination theory to find a connection between learner autonomy and learner motivation.

Ruanni TUPAS is an assistant professor at the English Language and Literature Academic Group of the National Institute of Education (NIE), Singapore. Prior to his NIE position, he was a senior lecturer at the Centre for English Language Communication (CELC) of the National University of Singapore (NUS) where he taught from 2002-2012. From 2009-2012, he was co-director of a capability-building curriculum development project funded by the Temasek Foundation for selected tertiary institutions in Singapore, Indonesia, Vietnam, and the Philippines. He is currently co-principal investigator of two funded research projects in Singapore – one on cross-cultural teaching in writing lessons, and the other on the use of multicultural literature to promote socio-emotional learning. His recent publications appear in Intercultural Education, Language and Education, and Multilingual and Multicultural Development.

Paolo Niño VALDEZ holds a PhD in linguistics from the Philippine Normal University and his dissertation, which investigated culture and code switching, was a finalist for the Christopher Brumfit Outstanding Dissertation Award in 2008. He is currently an associate professor, and officer in charge of the Vice Chair's office of the Department of English and Applied Linguistics, and former Graduate Program Coordinator & External Affairs Director of the College of Education, De La Salle University, Manila. His publications have appeared in Asia Pacific Education Researcher, Reflections in English Language Teaching, Philippine Journal of Linguistics, and Blackwell Encyclopedia of Applied Linguistics. His research interests are in the areas of bilingual education, critical pedagogy and contemporary sociolinguistics.

Ming-xin WANG is an associate professor in language education and vice dean of the Faculty of Foreign Languages in Shandong University of Technology, China. He has taught various English language programmes for over twenty years and worked at the Edinboro University of Pennsylvania as a visiting scholar for a year. His research interests include learner autonomy, cross-cultural communication, language comparison, English-Chinese translation, and language teacher education. He has published in key Chinese journals such as China Adult Education, Guanzi Journal, and China Science and Technology Translation. He serves on the Executive Committee of China Educational Linguistics Association and the Standing Committee of Shandong Translation Association.

Yi WANG is an associate professor in language education at Shandong University of Technology, China. She is currently undertaking her PhD study in applied linguistics at the University of Waikato as well as teaching ESOL at Waikato Institute of Technology. Before taking up the present study, she taught various English courses in China for fifteen years and worked as a visiting scholar in New Zealand for one year. Her research interests include teacher cognition, learner and teacher autonomy, reflective practice, and teacher development. Her present research focuses on the power and control issue in the development of learner autonomy. She is also contributing a book chapter on approaches to researching ESOL teachers' reflective practices.

Keith WOOD is professor at Sultan Hassanah Bolckiah Institute of Education, Brunei Darussalam, where he teaches courses on frameworks for education and instructional design, qualitative research methods, professional practice, and economics, business and enterprise education. His research interests include phenomenography and variation theory, and the investigation of teaching and learning practice for the 21st century. His most recent publication, co-authored with J. Calvo de Mora, is Practical knowledge in teacher education: Approaches to teacher internship programmes (2014).

Lawrence Jun ZHANG is professor and associate dean at the Faculty of Education of the University of Auckland, New Zealand, having previously been associate professor at Nanyang Technological University from 1999 to 2012. His research and publications cover a wide range of interests, such as cognitive, linguistic, sociocultural, and developmental factors in reading / biliteracy development, critical reading awareness in language education, metacognition, self-regulated learning (SRL), and reading development in L1 and L2 contexts. For many years, he has served as an editorial board member for several international journals, including TESOL Quarterly, Applied Linguistics Review, Metacognition and Learning, and RELC Journal.